This is Tina. She lives in a little village called Lower Mada which can be found on a small blue green planet called Earth. Tina is very sad and worried because all the plants and trees around Lower Mada have died. The countryside has become very bleak and empty. Once Lower Mada was such a beautiful village, now it has become a desolate wasteland.

People used to live in the village because it was so beautiful but now they are leaving because it is so ugly. Tina's school, once a busy place full of children, is almost empty. Miss Higginbottom, the only teacher remaining at the school, is very worried that it may have to close completely.

Tina's hobby is building radio sets in her bedroom. Sometimes she picks up transmissions from the other side of the world.

One day when Tina was reading a library book all about radios she found a chapter about special transmitters. It described how to build a radio that could send messages deep into space. Tina decided to do just that. Perhaps a friendly alien life form would hear her messages and be able to help her village.

A few days later, when Tina had almost finished her radio transmitter, something terrible happened while she was at school. Miss Higginbottom was just explaining a particularly difficult long division sum, when there was a knock at the door. The visitor had not brought good news. He was the local school inspector and had come to inform Miss Higginbottom that the Authorities had decided to close the school.

A sad Miss Higginbottom told the children they would all have to go to a different school in the next town unless six new pupils could be found. Everyone knew that the only way to attract six new pupils was to make the village beautiful again and that was impossible while all the plants kept dying.

Unless something could be done to solve Lower Mada's strange problem the school inspector would be back very soon to finally close the school.

After school Tina rushed home to finish her special radio transmitter. As soon as it was finished, she started sending messages deep into space. Maybe, just maybe, something, somewhere would hear them and be able to help her village.

All she could do now was wait and hope.

Is there life on other worlds?
If so, is it friendly?

The answers to these and other questions are all in the Space Mission Mada adventure.

Good Luck!
